Burn After Reading

Brad Pitt gets big laughs in a sharp satire

This Washington, D.C.-set story links several plotlines with delightful, dramatic — and shocking — results. It opens with a CIA man (John Malkovich) getting axed from the job for drinking too much.

But he tells his icy doctor wife (Tilda Swinton) that he quit to write a memoir. She, in turn, considers leaving him for her lover (George Clooney), who's hooking up behind her back with women he meets online, including a plastic surgery-obsessed personal trainer (Frances McDormand).

Enter her dopey, hyperactive coworker at the gym (a frosted-blond Brad Pitt).

His hilarious quirk? Grooving to his iPod during a stakeout. All the actors excel in this tight story from director-writers Joel and Ethan Coen (No Country for Old Men). With its clever plot twists and finessed dialogue, the film is an enjoyable — albeit eccentric — ride.

BRADLEY JACOBS

Clooney, playing a federal marshal, suspects that he's being followed.

Doofus Pitt finds a computer disc that contains a CIA agent's notes.
